

Dan Hesse,
Chief Executive Officer
Sprint Nextel
6200 Sprint Parkway
Overland Park, KS 66212

Dear Mr. Hesse,

I ask that Sprint Nextel not advertise in the Wall Street Journal. On May 14, 2010, the Wall Street Journal, for the second time in several months, used a form of the term "Polish Concentration Camp" which I find particularly hurtful since millions of Polish citizens perished in these camps. The use of the national adjective "Polish" wrongfully insinuates that the camps were designed, created and operated by Poles, when they were designed, created and operated by Nazi Germany in occupied Poland, and should be correctly referred to as such - "Nazi German camps in occupied Poland."

I believe that Poles paid a steep price in blood for their total defiance of German Nazism, and therefore earned the right not to have the memory of their loved ones tarnished, intentionally or not, even in the most subtle way, by sloppy journalism, such as was exhibited by the Wall Street Journal.

The Wall Street Journal refuses to correct the text of both articles on the website and refuses to take steps to prevent this hurtful term from ever appearing again in their publication. I do not believe that the insensitivity shown by the Wall Street Journal suits the image of Sprint Nextel and any association Sprint Nextel has with this Journal makes me less inclined to purchase or subscribe to any Sprint Nextel products or services - which is why I encourage you to stop advertising with the Wall Street Journal.

Sincerely,
